Members of the Rotary Club of North Fulton join together to donate four laptop computers to the nonprofit organization Voice Today.

COMMENT

ALPHARETA, Ga. - The Rotary Club of North Fulton provided a major technology boost to Voice Today with the donation of four laptop computers.

Voice Today is a nonprofit providing healing programs, awareness programs, prevention programs and support groups to inform and help prevent child sexual abuse. The organization had been working with old desktop computers that often crashed or took a long time to process information.

Angela Williams, the founder of Voice Today, said that many of the volunteers are students who are used to working with new technology.

"I have student volunteers who try to work on these old computers and say, 'why don't I do this work at home on my computer?' The problem is, once they go home they get distracted and nothing gets done."

The computers, four HP laptops connect wirelessly to the network and to the printer, will give Voice Today much needed flexibility allowing volunteers to work where they feel comfortable rather than where the computer is located.

Funding for the computers came from a district grant from the Rotary Foundation. District grants are made available to clubs as a result of Rotarians who donate money to the foundation. As a result of Rotarians' generosity, the foundation provides grants to clubs who wish to address specific needs in the community.

"It is satisfying to learn of a need in our community and be able to do something about it," said James Marosek the president of the Rotary Club of North Fulton. "By taking advantage of the grant along with the time and talent of members who helped deliver and install the computers, we have made a positive impact on our community."
